HOUSEPLANTS

A houseplant is a plant that is grown indoors in places such as residences and offices, namely for decorative purposes, but studies have also shown them to have positive psychological effects. They also help with indoor air purification, since some species, and the soil-dwelling microbes associated with them, reduce indoor pollution by absorbing volatile organic compounds including benzene, formaldehyde, and trichloroethylene.

While toxic to humans, such pollutants are absorbed by the plant and its soil dwelling microbes without harm. Houseplants need the correct moisture, light levels, soil mixture, temperature, and humidity. Without these conditions most house plants can die easily. As well, houseplants need the proper fertilizer and correct-sized pots.

WE DESIGN & CONSTRUCT

Construction is an ancient human activity. It began with the purely functional need for a controlled environment to moderate the effects of climate. Constructed shelters were one means by which human beings were able to adapt themselves to a wide variety of climates and become a global species.

Human shelters were at first very simple and perhaps lasted only a few days or months. Over time, however, even temporary structures evolved into such highly refined forms as the igloo. Gradually more durable structures began to appear, particularly after the development of agriculture, when people began to settle in one place for long periods.

According to Forbes, the construction industry is showing continued strong growth across the country.
